Legend

Full-Time and Part-Time Student Status

Graduate students who are participating in studies on a regular basis in an academic term and/or are registered in the academic year are considered to be full-time students. Graduate student status is not determined by the number of credit hours taken per term. Therefore, such students who spend much of the time in a laboratory or library engaged in research or writing a thesis/practicum, or who spend part of the academic year engaged in research elsewhere, are regarded as full-time students.

For every full year (twelve months) a Master's student is declared as part time they will receive an additional four months in time to complete their program. For every two years (24 months) a Master's student is declared as part time they will receive an additional year (12 months) in time to complete their program. For every two years (24 months) a Ph.D student is declared as part time they will receive an additional four months in time to complete their program.

Program Length (minimum time to graduation):

Master's Degrees

The minimum time for students in the Master's program is equivalent to two terms. Most units require more than two terms.

Doctoral (Ph.D) Degrees

The minimum time requirement for the program of study for a Ph.D. degree will normally be two years of study beyond the level of the Master's degree, or three years beyond the level of a Bachelor's degree. The student may be permitted to spend one of these years in an approved program of research or study elsewhere.

Detailed program information can be found at

The minimum passing grade in the Faculty of Graduate Studies is C+. Program minimums may be higher.

The academic year is September to August each year.
